Director's Note

I could not be prouder of the final year girls at London College of Music's BA (Hons) Acting. Not only have they have been working through the challenges of completing their studies and training during a pandemic, being brought back into intense "IRL" rehearsals working on two contrasting shows simultaneously, they have also stood strong, united and supportive of each other during the ongoing galvanising effects of recent events surrounding the safety of women in London and the rest of the world.

The Wolves, by Sarah Delappe, created for us momentous joy and rage around our identities and places in this world as women.

The show is beautifully clever, funny, and energetic with fast paced conversations, strenuous physicality and relationships between young American teenage girls, each having their own unique trials as young women. It challenges the audience to keep up with them!

The actors displayed an immense amount of professionalism and resilience through the process, and I am excited to see these students take their bold steps into our industry. We hope you enjoy the show as much as we have enjoyed lifting it off the pages!
